Extra Work On Writing In English Classes

Dept. Head Russell Severe, Patricia Bryan, Dean Burgess, Virginia Fairbank, Charles Greenberg.

Wayne Kosek, Gregory Leitner, Dr. Lawrence McNamara, Connie Relias, Norma Wissing.

Rapt student Ray Noceda in Expository Writing.

Students in English cut, stack, fan, and riffle "the deck." No, this is not card-playing. The terms come from a new series of books which stress sequential experiences in writing. Members of the English Department believe writing is a skill which can be developed, but, like any skill, it takes practice.

Spanish and bilingual students continued their mini exchange program, going on field trips together, helping each other perfect their speaking in English and Spanish. Ursala Baker joined the department as a teacher's aide. Language clubs had another active year. (See pages 58, 84, and 85.) In April fifteen German students and their teacher spent three weeks here, living with local families and attending classes; in the summer our students went there. (See page 91.) Advanced students participated in national language exams. Kathy Petersen and Peter Hunt placed in the German exam; Scott Brandt, Michael McGinley, and Donna Enders in French; Alex Ruberte, Geri DiBella, Leslie Cox, and Arnold Kriegbaum in Spanish.

Chris Henle, German.

New to the Learning Resource Center were Alexandria Ridenour, Assistant librarian, and three more mini-computers. An even greater attraction than last year, these mini-computers (Personal Electronic Translators, commonly called "the PETS") were used greatly in math and English to supplement classroom work.

Despite the decline in school enrollment, the mathematics department has experienced steady growth. Keeping with the trend towards technology, computer programming courses offered programming in three languages: Basic, Cobol, and Fortran. Teachers Tim Kanold and Lee Yunker had speaking engagements in Dekalb and Normal, Illinois. Yunker also spoke at Salt Lake City, Washington, D. C., and St. Louis. Four new teachers were added to the faculty: Richard Berg, Pat LaMaster, Tim Kanold, and Michael Barborak. (See page 83, Math Club).

Class of 1981

Senior spirit prevailed during Homecoming; seniors won the hall-decorating contest and tricycle race. They also sponsored the Homecoming dance to raise funds for the class gift, an annual scholarship award for a graduating senior, beginning with the Class of 1982. RIGHT, FRONT: Treasurer Amy-Jo Woomer, Adviser Carol Sweder, Vice-President Margaret Murnane. BACK: Secretary Brigitte Kynast, President Meg Nickelson.
